

A Manufacturer's Overstock of 600 Stylish Wash Dresses

Values Worth $3
For $1.98

The unusual values in this sale of charming Street and House Dresses will appeal to every woman who wants a supply of fresh, serviceable frocks for summer wear at a saving of almost half.

Including Linens, Voiles, Imported Gingham, Madras and Linene.

Choice of light and dark colorings, in a large and varied assortment of styles. Every dress is well made and up to date in style. Come prepared to buy enough to last all summer. Sizes 34 to 46.

Values that cannot be matched for less than $3 offered at $1.98.

Basement.

Kaufmann Company

Corner Fourth and Broad Streets

SOCIAL and PERSONAL

An important wedding of interest here to be celebrated on Saturday, June 21, is that of Miss Eva Marie Gulland, daughter of Mr. William Gulland, to Mr. Ten Brock Rank. The ceremony will take place in the afternoon at half-past 3 o'clock at the residence of Dr. and Mrs. Alexander Crombie Humphreys, "Lanook," in Morristown, N. J.

Mrs. Lendonia Randolph Dashiell is now in New Jersey to attend the wedding, and the bride-elect has a great many friends in Richmond, having frequently visited here as the guest of Mrs. Dashiell. Dr. Humphreys is president of the Stevens Institute of Technology.

To Attend House Party.

Miss Ellen Belme Scott will leave tomorrow for Virginia, where she will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Buchanan for a very attractive house party that they are giving this week. Miss Carter Ingram will also leave on Friday to attend Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan's house party.

Messick-Blackwell.

One of the most prominent weddings of the month was celebrated in the land last evening at the home of the bride's parents, Dr. and Mrs. R. E. Blackwell, of Randolph-Macon College, when their daughter, Miss Epie Duncan Blackwell, was married to John Frederick Messick. The bride was escorted by her father, and the ceremony was performed by Dr. James A. Duncan, an uncle of the bride.

Dr. Blackwell gave his daughter away. She entered the drawing-room in a gown and wore a lovely veil of white tulle with a tulle veil and orange blossoms, and carried a presentation bouquet of lilies of the valley. Mrs. Richard B. Sample, of Martinsville, was matron of honor, and wore a white broadcloth gown and carried a bouquet of white sweet peas. The bridesmaids, Misses Anne Pendle-

Dunlop Flour

IT'S MADE IN RICHMOND

The Dunlop Mills, Richmond, Va.

HAMMOND

"Flowers of Guaranteed Freshness."

Tel. Mad. 630.

Dreyfus

"Specialists in Apparel for Women."

Broad at Second.

See Our 1913 Patterns of GO-CARTS and CARRIAGES.

Rothert & Co.

Fourth and Broad.

The Velvet Kind

Same Quality Every Day.

PURITY ICE CREAM

Monroe 1861.

Special Desk Offer

We have a limited quantity of 8-foot Standing Desks, in solid oak, at the special price $15.00 net.

Sydnor & Hundley

Seventh and Grace Streets

Shepherd's New Factory

2008 W. Broad St. Call Mad. 7148

JURGENSEN

DETROIT GAS RANGES, ALASKA REFRIGERATORS, OLD HICKORY FURNITURE, SOLD ONLY BY

age. All interested are cordially invited to attend. This affair was given some time during the spring season by all of the minor auxiliaries in the city and proved an enormous success from beginning to end.

Another charity event that will take place Friday evening is "For Love of Money," Helen Griffith plays. The affair will be presented at 8:30 o'clock for the Aid and Aid Club and the Grace Street Presbyterian Church. The cast includes a number of prominent and talented people and there is to be a musical program as well.

Draper-Valentine.

The marriage of Mrs. Edna Rose Valentine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Valentine, and Harold Marriott Draper, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Draper, took place on Tuesday morning at 10:30 o'clock at the Church of the Ascension. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride, who entered the church with her father, was given away by her father. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

Mr. and Mrs. Draper are now on a wedding tour that will include Colorado Springs and a visit to the bride's sister, Mrs. E. Noel, in Louisville, Ky.; Cincinnati and other places of interest. Mrs. Fred B. Evenden entertained the bridal party on Monday evening. A color scheme of yellow and green was carried out very effectively in the decorations, and a buffet supper was served. Music was rendered by Chas. Evenden at the piano. The bride's maid of honor was Miss Edith McConnell, a cousin of the bride, who was given away by her father. The groom's best man was Mr. Frank D. Beck, who was given away by his father. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The ushers at the marriage were Messrs. Dugman, Chris Evenden, Henderson, Tiller and L. T. Christian, Jr. Another affair given in honor of the bride was a linen shower at which her aunt, Mrs. Robert Shafer, of 2405 Grove Avenue, on Saturday. Those present were Messrs. Dugman, Chris Evenden, Henderson, Tiller and L. T. Christian, Jr. The bride was given away by her father. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was given away by her father. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

A reception was tendered the bride and groom on Tuesday evening at the home of the bride. Immediately after the ceremony, the bride and groom left for the North, and their wedding trip will include Washington, Philadelphia and Atlantic City. After July 1 they will be at home at 902 West Main Street. Among the guests who attended the wedding were Messrs. Dugman, Chris Evenden, Henderson, Tiller and L. T. Christian, Jr. The bride was given away by her father. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

At Virginia Beach. After returning the golf tournament in Norfolk last Saturday, F. J. D. Mackay spent the week at the Virginia cottage at Virginia Beach, where he joined a party of friends. Some of the guests who attended the wedding were Messrs. Dugman, Chris Evenden, Henderson, Tiller and L. T. Christian, Jr. The bride was given away by her father. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

The bride entered the church with her father, who gave her away. She wore a gown of navy blue cloth with a smart hat to match, and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was given away by his father. He wore a tuxedo and carried a white boutonniere. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Scott, and the church was prettily decorated with palms and ferns. Miss Marie Kerse played the wedding march.

BRITISH ADMIRALS WED AMERICAN WOMEN

Two Youngest in Navy in Running for Promotion to Highest Grade.

BY LA MARQUE DE FONTENAY.

WITH the promotion of Viscount Hood's son to flag rank, it happens that the two youngest admirals of the British navy have American wives. For Rear-Admiral David Beatty, just two months younger than Hood, his senior in promotion, is married to the only daughter of the late Marshall Field, of Chicago. Both officers are, therefore, well in the running for promotion to the rank of admiral of the fleet, the highest grade in the British navy, and the retiring age for which is seventy years. So that they have the chance of serving for nearly thirty years on the flag list of the British navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Horace Hood was connected for a time with the British embassy at Washington as naval attaché, and the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

Admiral Hood is the next heir to his elder brother's viscountcy and barony of Hood, which was created in favor of his great-grandfather, the famous English Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, in recognition of his numerous naval victories in the two closing decades of the eighteenth century, and especially for his capture of the island of Corsica, and for his defeat of the fleets of France and Spain in the Bay of Gibraltar. Since then at least half a dozen members of this old Devonshire family have fallen in battle, and with a couple of exceptions none of the men has done service in the army or in the navy.

China, being twice wounded, and winning promotion from the rank of commander to that of captain, at the early age of twenty-nine, by his capture of a couple of Chinese batteries with a few of his sailors.

Both of these admirals enjoy in an altogether exceptional degree the friendship and good will of King George, while their American wives are great favorites of Queen Mary. The Beattys are near neighbors to the monarch and his consort during their annual autumn stay in the Highlands, while Queen Mary learned to know and appreciate the American wife of Admiral Hood when he was in command of the Naval College at Osborne, where the young princes received their education.

The Admiral and Mrs. Hood make their principal home at Sheep's Lodge, in the outskirts of London. The Admiral is a member of the House of Commons on Richmond Park, and which they purchased from the late Duke of Devonshire. In fact, it was while visiting his sister, the Duchess of Devonshire, at Sheep's Lodge, that King George and Queen Mary, in the garden of the place.

Cardinals, being human, are in no sense exempt from the ills that afflict mankind, and the story which comes by cable from Rome of the death of the nervous breakdown of Cardinal Vives y Tuto, has developed into so acute a form of neurasthenia as to entail the loss of reason, is a case, while extremely rare in the annals of the Sacred College, not entirely without precedent.

For the late Cardinal Edward Henry Howard became demented some five years before his death. He was a magnificent looking man, who served as a lieutenant and as a captain in the Second Regiment of Life Guards, before entering holy orders. He was appointed to the see of Bath, and he had selected him for the office because he was the only man whose great stature and majestic appearance was calculated to command the respect of the faithful. He was a member of the great British House of Commons, and he was a member of the House of Lords.

Shortly after becoming cardinal, he visited England, and attended a large party at Marlborough House, given by the Duke of Devonshire. The Prince of Wales, who was still Duke of Cornwall, was present. It was the occasion of a cardinal being invited to a royal entertainment in England since the days of the Reformation. The cardinal was the former commanding officer of the Second Regiment of Life Guards, who had, meanwhile, become a general, and colonel-in-chief of the corps. Being a Roman Catholic, he naturally bowed the knee and kissed the ring of the cardinal Howard, the only instance of paying any such act of homage to one of his former subalterns. When Cardinal Howard returned to Rome, it became necessary to place him under restraint, as his insanity was of a violent character, rendered dangerous by his great bodily strength and stature.

The violence of the church should not be committed to for one moment. There was a talk of confining him in a monastery, which seems to be the fate in store for the Spanish brother Cardinal Ruffini, who is suffering from a similar ailment. The Duke of Norfolk, premier peer of the British realm, would not hear of any such thing, and took charge of his afflicted relative, setting aside for his use a private residence in the beautiful castle of Arundel, which he has with a private garden, where the cardinal spent the remaining years of his life in the care of private physicians and nurses, the subject of the most affectionate solicitude on the part of the duke and of the latter's brother, Lord Edmund Talbot. He died there in 1892, his remains being conveyed to Rome, for entombment in his cathedral church of St. Peter.

Arundel Castle, once the home of Alfred the Great, is so vast in extent, and is surrounded by such spacious grounds, that Cardinal Howard was able to live there without his privacy being ever disturbed by the throngs of tourists visiting it every year.

Some of the London weekly so-called society papers, which are published for the benefit of the suburban "smart set" by means of advertisements, formed themselves, in recording the visit of King George and Queen Mary to a metropolitan theatre, describe with muchunction how the royal couple were seated on the balcony of the theatre, and how the manager, who led the way to the royal box, walking backwards, holding aloft a double-branched lighted silver candlestick, in accordance with the requirements of etiquette.

Now, although this old-time form of respect to the anointed of the Lord has been retained in certain of the smaller German capitals, it has been abolished for nearly ninety years in England. Thanks to modern lighting, those days, when there was neither gas nor electricity, the lighting of the foyers and corridors of the playhouses was very poorly arranged, in order to emphasize the honor paid to the sovereign, all other light sources, the corridors traversed by him, save the candles borne by the manager, were extinguished.

One night, when George IV. attended the performance at the Covent Garden Theatre, and was being escorted to the customary fashion, a draught blew out the candles borne by the manager, and left the whole party standing in a dark passage until it was lighted by the manager. King was very angry and impatient, and ordered the practice of being conducted in this fashion by the manager, walking backwards with a lighted candlestick, to be discontinued, declaring it to be "damned foolish." (Copyright, 1913, by the Breatwood Company.)

Romaine-Jones.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Chester, Va., June 18.—The marriage of Miss Helen M. Scott Jones, daughter of Mrs. L. S. Scott Jones, formerly of Pennsylvania, and Lawrence Hamilton Romaine, son of Mrs. Harry P. Stratton, of Petersburg, and grand-nephew of Mrs. V. A. Romaine of that city, took place this evening at 8:30 o'clock at the home of the bride, "Scottdale," Chesterfield County. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Joseph S. Graham, of Chesterfield, on the broad piazza of the attractive country home, which was converted into a woodland bower of ferns and flowers of various varieties. The "Wedding March" from Mendelssohn was rendered in connection with a solo by Grafton Gay Baker, "Oh, Promise Me," and a violin solo by Wilbur Lamb, of Petersburg. "Love's Own Sweet Song."

The bride wore a gown of white crepe de Chine, trimmed with princess lace and pearls, with veil and pearl cap; and carried a shower bouquet of lilies and lilies of the valley. The bridesmaids, Misses Mary Kenyon, of Chester, acted as matron of honor, and was gowned in white crepe chiffon tunic and rhinestone trimmings, carrying a handsome bouquet of pink roses and sweet peas. James Scott, brother of the bride, was best man. Mr. and Mrs. Romaine will leave Thursday for New York and other Northern points.

MISS WERNER WEDS

Daughter of Chief of Police Becomes Bride of Henry William Eiders

Miss Ruth Cleveland Werner, daughter of Chief of Police and Mrs. Louis Werner, was married to Henry William Eiders on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents, 1215 E. Main Street. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Oscar G. Gable, pastor of St. John's German Lutheran Church.

The wedding was celebrated in the presence of more than 200 friends of the bride and groom, after which they were entertained by Major and Mrs. Werner and Mr. and Mrs. Eiders. The house was beautifully decorated.